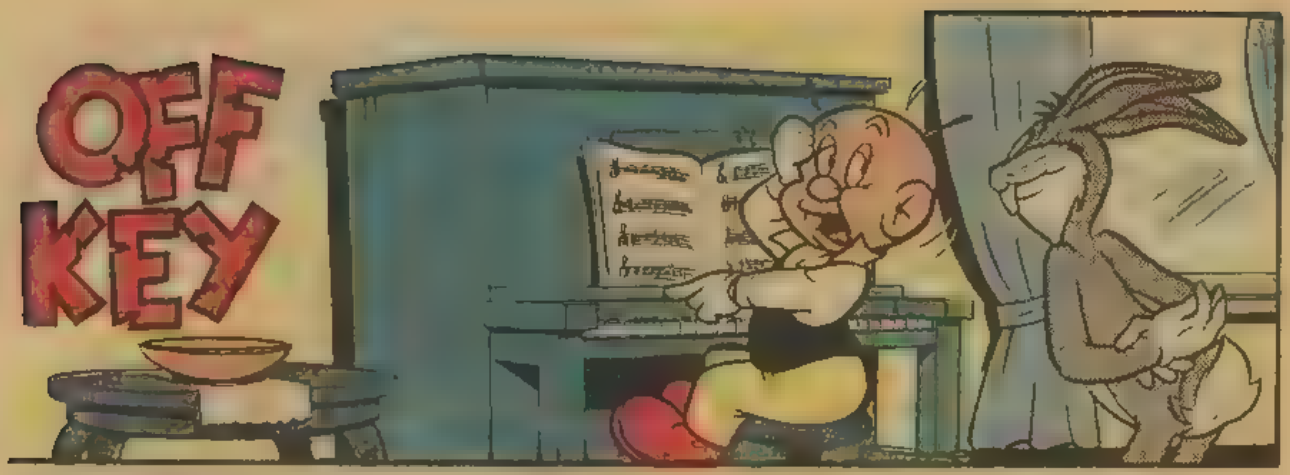
OFF KEY



PLINK, PLUNKETY, PLANG-G-G! went the old piano in Elmer Fudd's house as Bugs Bunny bounced up the front steps. From the sound of it, Elmer's old piano hadn't been tuned in years. Bugs halted with a grimace and covered his ears.

"Bro-ther!" he choked. "Is it possible old Fuddsy thinks the Harmony Boys Barber Shop Quartet is going to practice with that? I said from the start that we should use my guitar, and now I know it! I'll have to arrange it some way — that's for sure!"

Bugs marched purposefully into the house and, sure enough, there was Elmer, seated at the piano, lost in the rapture of the off-key concert he was playing. He motioned to Bugs not to interrupt him, and poor Bugs had to sit in painful silence until Elmer was finished. Then Elmer turned to him with a pleased smile.

"Beautiful, isn't it?" he sighed.

"Beautiful?" Bugs could only stare at Elmer in disbelief. He had never heard such a nerve-shattering racket, nor could he believe that Elmer could be so tone-deaf as to be unaware of the discord he was creating. "You mean to say . . ." he began hotly. Then he stopped as he saw the frown begin to cloud up Elmer's face. Bugs knew very well that if Elmer's feelings were hurt, he would probably quit the Harmony Boys Quartet and ruin the whole project.

For a moment, Bugs stood there, wondering what to say or do. Then a sudden happy thought occurred to him.

"Fuddsy," Bugs exclaimed, "do you have anything to serve for a snack when we're through with our practice session?"

Elmer looked very embarrassed. "Why — no," he admitted. "I guess I just didn't think of that. Oh, dear! What will I do?"

Bugs glanced at his watch. "You'll just have time to run down to the store and get something. Hurry! I'll wait here in case the others arrive before you get back."

As soon as Elmer had gone, Bugs found a screwdriver and a pair of pliers and went to work.

"I always knew that piano tuning course I took would come in handy some day," Bugs chuckled as he expertly adjusted the piano strings.

Presently, Bugs sat down and ran his fingers over the keys. The notes came out clear and sharp.

"There," Bugs said proudly. "Now it's in perfect tune."

When Elmer returned with the snacks, Bugs was waiting for him with a smile of anticipation.

"Come over here, Fuddsy," he invited, "and play something for me on your piano."

"Why, certainly," Elmer agreed, sliding onto the piano stool and flexing his fingers. "I'll play my favorite waltz for you."

Elmer began to play, and Bugs nodded and grinned to himself. Now the music sounded just fine. He watched Elmer, waiting eagerly for his reaction.

It came quickly enough, when Elmer turned on Bugs with an expression of utter consternation.

"Listen to my piano!" Elmer moaned. "It's wuined! Something awful must have happened to it while I was gone!"

When Bugs was able to close his mouth, he stuttered, "But — but —"

"Now the Hawmony Boys Quartet will just have to pwactice with your guitar, Bugs. My piano is all off key!"

"Fresh up" Freddie says:

"RIGHT NOW, you're probably asking yourself-

What does a fox hunter drink to quench his thirst?"

"I'm a foxy fox hunter! I hunt foxy foxes with my faithful friend Snifty. (He ain't nothin' but a hound dog!)"

"Snifty's a nifty sniffer—but that fox outfoxes us. He knows we're hot on his trail. Our mouths are hot and our throats are hot."

"So ole foxy sets a real cool trap for us! He leads us right to 7-Up. Can't resist this real thirst-quencher. While we have our 7-Up, Mr. Fox hightails it away. Pretty foxy!"

Be foxy yourself. When your throat is hot and dry, have a chilled 7-Up. As "Fresh up" Freddie always says: " 'Fresh up' with 7-Up!"
